

Course Name

Aspiring Managers Programme

Course Overview

Management is a skill that can be learned, transferred and something everyone should aspire to develop

Course Objectives

This introductory course aims to develop the next generation by targeting managers-to-be and preparing them with an introduction to management, so that they are ready when the next vacancy arises.

AMP provides the fundamental knowledge and skills required to eventually become an effective first line manager, team leader or supervisor. It also gives tips on making the transition and navigating the first few weeks and months.

Furthermore, if you're applying for supervisory or management roles, the knowledge you gain will be invaluable in interviews for those roles.

Main objective

- To develop a pipeline of new management talent and aid with succession planning.
- To help new and aspiring managers grow and develop their management acumen through theory and practical application.
- To prepare prospective managers to effectively make the transition from 'work mate' to manager.

Who Should Attend

- Any employer in any sector, especially large-medium organisations.
- Team members with a realistic chance of becoming a first line manager, team leader or supervisor within a year or two.
- New managers who have had little or no management training to equip them.
